HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 24TH, 1875.

IT is gratifying to learn that the Ordinance for the better protection of Chinese women and children has had a deterrent effect in reducing the number of cases of kidnapping. The evil has always been one of great magnitude, and still continues to flourish, partly, no doubt, as Captain DEANE has pointed out in his report, owing to the ignorance of the law still prevailing among the lower classes of Chinese women. Kidnapping cases will go on decreasing, year by year, as the women become better aware of the protection afforded them by the Ordinance, until this offence against civilisation is wiped out altogether. The sale of women and children in China is such a common occurrence, being recognised by law, that it is not much matter for wonder that these slaves have been extensively brought into this Colony. The custom is one of the most signal proofs that Chinese civilisation is only a veneer. The treatment of women among a people marks pretty accurately their position in the scale of civilisation. Of course, allowance must be made for the fact that in all Eastern countries women have always been regarded as inferiors and treated with disrespect and neglect. None the less, however, are these practices of the Chinese to be emphatically reprobated. The fact that female children are marketable leads to that most odious crime of stealing them in order to sell them to brothel keepers. A more disgusting and inhuman offence can scarcely be conceived, and it is one that ought to be visited with a very heavy penalty. The Chinese must be taught that offences of this kind cannot be committed on British soil without the transgressor of the law receiving severe and condign punishment.

Captain DEANE has directed attention to a defect in the Ordinance which has come to light in the investigation of cases, namely, that no section applies to those who have been sold out of the Colony. At present it is a common practice to purchase women at Canton and other places and bring them here to be shipped away for purposes of prostitution. The law has hitherto proved insufficient to reach such offenders, so that while it was a punishable offence to sell women or children in Hongkong, they could be imported with impunity. To meet this serious omission the ATTORNEY-GENERAL yesterday introduced in the Legislative Council an amendment of the existing Ordinance. According to the altered law, anyone bringing people to Hongkong knowing them to have been sold for the purpose of prostitution, or who harbours them knowing them to have been bought anywhere for that purpose, will be guilty of a misdemeanour. This is a very necessary addition to the law, and will no doubt speedily produce a salutary effect. The punishment must not be a light one, however, or it will fail in its intention. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL did not enter into particulars; he merely gave assurance that the evil now so rife would shortly be checked. It has too long been a blot upon the colony that such iniquities could be carried on under British Government, and offenders against morality and decency be able to escape scot free. One by one the crimes against humanity to which Eastern nations have been so addicted are being rendered difficult and hazardous under English rule. There remains much to be accomplished, probably, in her MAJESTY'S Eastern dominions, but the grosser outrages on civilisation have at least been repressed, and the people taught the difference between a code of laws founded on Christianity, and those having their origin in a superstitious idolatry or a cold and heartless scepticism.

A CORRESPONDENT has addressed to us a complaint to the effect that the sampans or pull-away boats in the harbour are improperly manned—that, in fact, many of them are not manned at all, for "they are pulled by an old woman and a boy." He goes on to propose that this defect should be remedied by licenses being granted only on the condition that the boats were rowed by men. This is one of those small grievances which the public must solve for itself. The remedy suggested by our correspondent could not be carried into effect without very constant surveillance of the boats, which would necessitate an addition to the water police, and even then the condition would be constantly evaded. The only result that would be attained, in fact, would be a slight accession to the work of the police court, without any corresponding benefit to passengers. The surest way is for intending passengers to choose boats which appear to be efficiently manned. Besides, many of the boatwomen are as skilful in the management of the oar as the stronger sex, and it would be aiming a cruel blow at an industrious and numerous body if it were attempted to prohibit them from plying an avocation to which they have been to all intents and purposes born and bred.

The cases at the Summary Court yesterday, before Mr. Justice Snowden, were few and unimportant.

The P. M. Steamship Great Republic, having been re-coppered, returned from Aberdeen yesterday morning.

We understand that the Government contemplate creating a very handsome fountain in the Protestant Cemetery, at Happy Valley.

We notice that in the Public Gardens another house, similar to that occupied by the owls, has been built for the accommodation of a fine eagle.

Some anxiety has been felt with regard to the non-arrival of the Vasco de Gama at Yokohama. Our readers will be glad to hear that a telegram has been received by the Agent of the P. M. S.S. Co, announcing her safe arrival at that port on the 21st instant.

In the report of a case of cutting and wounding, in the Police Court, which appeared in yesterday's issue, Mr. Medina was stated to be landlord of the "Welcome Home" Inn. Mr. Medina is landlord of the "British Crown," did not appear as a witness in the case, and of course had no share in the matter.

The British ship Atlantic, which arrived on Sunday evening, and anchored some distance off Green Island, sailed into port yesterday, for the purpose of docking. She left this port on the 30th ulto., for Vancouver's Island, but while making the passage she went on shore on the southernmost island of the Madjicosimah Group. On floating again, she put back on the 16th instant.

Writing on the prospects of the Cornell Watch Manufacturing Company, the San Francisco Daily Call of January 1st, 1875 says, after suggesting that two thousand girls could be profitably employed in this enterprise:—"If the Chinese should be taught watchmaking, it is altogether probable that the business would pass into the hands of the Chinese; and as the workmen suggest, watches for the trade of this coast would be manufactured by Chinese companies."

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The Legislative Council met yesterday afternoon. There were present:—

Hon. Sir J. SMALE, Chief Justice.
Hon. J. G. AUSTIN, Colonial Secretary.
Hon. J. BRAMSTON, Attorney General.
Hon. C. C. SMITH, Colonial Treasurer.
Hon. W. H. ALEXANDER.
Hon. P. RYRIE.
Hon. J. WHITTALL.
Hon. H. LOWCOCK.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY said that as H.E. the Governor was absent, he had to request the Chief Justice to take the Chair.

Mr. LISTER (clerk of Councils) then read the minutes of last meeting, which were confirmed.

THE LATE CLERK OF COUNCILS.

The CHIEF-JUSTICE then said:—Before proceeding to the ordinary business of the day, I cannot but remark that since we last met we have lost from this Council room a once familiar face—a face which I have seen ever since I came to this Colony. His illness was of some continuance, and I cannot but feel and think that had he left the Colony in time, in all probability, humanly speaking, he might have been here fulfilling his duties to-day. I hope we shall all learn a lesson from this, and that is to take care and not stay here against our own experience and the advice of medical men. The same thing which has occurred to the gentlemen to whom I now refer, happened, I can well remember, with regard to at least two of the public officers, who have died in harness here. It would be unseemly to proceed to the ordinary business of the day without recalling to our minds, and recording on the books of the Council, the feeling which we entertain towards the memory of the deceased Mr. d'Almada e Castro. He has served the Colony longer than any other public officer. Since 1836, he has been an officer of the Crown in the East. He was appointed by Sir Charles Elliot, when he was plenipotentiary in China. It was only in 1870 that I met Sir Charles Elliot, and the only person for whom he enquired with earnestness and interest was the late Mr. d'Almada e Castro. He spoke of him with much regard, and desired me to express to him his kind remembrances and good wishes, which I had the pleasure of doing. Mr. d'Almada came here in 1847. He then became clerk to this Council, and about the same time he became a clerk in the Colonial office. He had been originally an officer in the service of the Queen of Portugal, and was so at the time he was appointed to his position here. I am sure that everyone present, according to the length of time he has known Mr. d'Almada, will say that he always discharged his duties faithfully, and with assiduity and discretion. His valuable services to the Government of this Colony I have myself experienced from time to time ever since I came here, which was early in the year, 1862. His ability is well known to all of us, for we never had occasion to go to the Colonial office or to refer to anything that had passed, but what Mr. d'Almada was ever in a position to give us the desired information. No man, I think, could ever have shown more ability and assiduity in the difficult management of office details than he did. His memory must have been wonderful. I don't think I ever recollect—and perhaps I will be borne out in my statement by the Hon. Colonial Secretary and the Hon. Colonial Treasurer—having to go to him for a single memorial of a past transaction, but he was always able at once to refer to it. He was possessed of one great virtue, and that was this—he understood how to be silently discreet. In his position, above all others, that is the most proper quality a man can have, because in the intercourse of the office with which he was connected, either in foreign relations, or in matters connected with private individuals, he could not be kept ignorant of what was going on, and Mr. d'Almada never allowed any human being to know what had passed in the office. I, therefore, feel these are qualities which we ought to recognise in the deceased, and we cannot but express to his family the great esteem in which we held him. I regret H.E. the Governor is not here to give his weight and influence to the expression of the resolution which I am about to propose, for I am sure he would have expressed himself in a way which would have been much more gratifying to the family of the deceased and to the public than I can possibly do. I have at all events the satisfaction of knowing that His Excellency has seen the resolution, and that it receives his cordial approval. I need not say any more, but proceed to read the resolution which I have now to submit to the Council:—"That this Council greatly regrets the death of Leonardo d'Almada e Castro, Esq., the oldest public servant in this Colony, who having in 1836, entered the service of the Crown in the office of the Superintendency of British trade in China, has, since May, 1847, been Clerk of the Councils, and First Clerk in the office of the Colonial Secretary. This Council cordially records its high estimate of his public services in these important offices, the duties of which he has discharged faithfully and with great ability, assiduity, and discretion, and, expressing its appreciation of the private worth of the deceased, it offers its condolence to his widow and family." I do not think I need add any more to what I have already said. Mr. d'Almada's private worth was, if less publicly appreciated, as much respected by all who knew him as his public character.

Mr. WHITTALL said: As one of the oldest members of the Council I have much pleasure in seconding the resolution which has been put by the Chief-Justice. I have known Mr. d'Almada for many years, and from my own personal experience I can fully endorse all that has been said respecting the many estimable qualities of the character of the deceased.

The resolution was put and passed unanimously.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY said: I have another resolution to propose with reference to the late Mr. d'Almada. The Chief-Justice has borne ample testimony to the character of our departed friend, but as head of his department it will not be amiss if I should state in what estimation I held him. He was a man of pleasant, quiet, gentlemanly manners, at all times willing to impart any information sought from him. He was diligent and accurate in the discharge of his duties, and took a lively interest in them. He had a retentive memory and was, in consequence, a very dictionary of public events, transactions and correspondence occurring during an official career of 38 years. During this long period of service my departed friend was not able to make proper provision for his family. I believe, in the ordinary acceptation of the words, he may be considered to have been a prudent man, but unfortunately several investments he made were of such a character as to involve loss instead of gain. Independent of this, he was called upon to contribute the large sum of $3,200 towards the superannuation fund connected with the Government Service of this Colony. Honourable members are no doubt aware that at the present time public officers are not required to contribute to it. When the fund was first established in 1842, contribution was optional, but if any one did not contribute of course they derived no benefit from it. Mr. d'Almada, under the impression that he would not be entitled to a pension, did not at first contribute. In 1846 it was made compulsory, but Mr. d'Almada still declined. In 1857 the payments were abolished, and all were admitted to the pension fund; but it was intimated to those gentlemen who had been in the service up to 1858, that if they had not contributed they would not be entitled to a pension. For a long time Mr. d'Almada was unwilling to pay, but at last he did so, and obtained and put into the public treasury no less a sum than $3,200. Considering that owing to his paying this large amount, Mr. d'Almada left his family destitute, I think it is not only on grounds of sympathy—that sympathy which we have shown to all public officers—but on the ground of common justice that we should vote a sum for the widow and daughter of the deceased. I beg to propose that a monthly payment of $100 be granted to Mrs. d'Almada, and a monthly payment of $50 be granted to his daughter for their lives.

Mr. RYRIE seconded the proposition. He did so with pleasure, feeling that there never was a case where a grant had been made in respect of a deceased public officer in this Colony more deserving than this. He made the acquaintance of Mr. d'Almada a long time ago, it being now nearly twenty years since he first saw him at his desk in that office. He endorsed most cordially all that the Colonial Secretary had said about the great readiness with which he performed his duties, and the fidelity to business that he had always displayed. He (Mr. Ryrie) did not suppose, from what he had seen, that a better head of an office could be found anywhere. As far as he knew, the character of deceased was most estimable. The Colony, he thought, could do nothing less than vote the sums which had been suggested for the benefit of the widow and daughter of the deceased. He would, in fact, be inclined to say that it might have been a little more, but under present circumstances perhaps it would be better not to ask too much.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY said, with reference to which had just fallen from Mr. Ryrie, that he might mention that he had at first proposed that the contribution of $3,200 should be returned to the family. But then he thought that if they adopted that system they should have to repay every one, and under the circumstances he was of opinion that it ought to be given in the form of a monthly grant.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously.

PERSONATION ORDINANCE.

The CHIEF-JUSTICE then proposed the first reading of an Ordinance entitled, "An Ordinance enacted by the Governor of Hongkong, with the advice of the Legislative Council thereof, to render personation with intent to deprive any person of any property felony." The statement of objects and reasons is as follows:—"This Ordinance is a transcript of a recent Act of the Imperial Parliament 37 and 38, Vic., cap. 36. It simplifies the mode of proceeding in cases of fraudulent personation, and increases the punishment on conviction. The only difference between this Ordinance and the Imperial Act, is in the minimum of penal servitude—the Act fixes it at five years, and the maximum of imprisonment at two years with nothing between—the Ordinance proposes the same scale of punishment as for other felonies."

The Ordinance was accordingly read a first time.

THE POLICE FORCE IN THE NAVAL YARD.

The CHIEF-JUSTICE then proposed the first reading of an Ordinance entitled, "An Ordinance enacted by the Governor of Hongkong, with the advice of the Legislative Council thereof, to provide means for enforcing good order and discipline in the Police Force employed in the Royal Naval Yard."

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL gave the statement of objects and reasons as follows:—"This Ordinance is introduced at the request of the Naval Authorities, who are about to renew the engagements entered into with the Police employed at the Naval Yard, and desire to have the power of enforcing discipline as here provided. The second section gives to the Officer in charge of the Yard similar powers to those of the Captain Superintendent in respect of the Colonial Police Force; and the third section, which is almost a transcript of a section in the Police Act, subjects the members of the force to the same penalties as the Colonial Police are liable to for neglect of duty or other misconduct."

The Ordinance was read a first time.

THE PROTECTION OF CHINESE FEMALES.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL then introduced an ordinance to amend the existing ordinance for the better protection of Chinese women and children. The present ordinance had been found to be insufficient. He proposed to meet the case of women purchased out of the Colony and brought in for the purpose of being shipped away. The only alteration would be that anyone who brings people here, knowing they have been sold for the purpose of prostitution, or who harbours them knowing them to have been bought anywhere for that purpose, will be guilty of a misdemeanour. The Attorney-General then gave the title of the proposed ordinance, which was read a first time.

MR. RYRIE AND THE CONDUCT OF THE CAPTAIN SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE.

Mr. RYRIE said: I gave notice of three questions that I intended to ask to-day. They are:—1st.—Whether any reply or communication has been received from Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Colonies regarding a petition addressed to the Executive by a large number of the community complaining of the conduct of the Captain Superintendent of Police during the typhoon of last September? 2nd.—Whether any reply has been received, from Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State to my protest against His Excellency the Governor's answer to my complaints that the Fire Brigade was not summoned or turned out on the occasion above referred to? 3rd.—If replies or communications have been received, how are they worded? I now beg to put these questions.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY: I have to inform the honourable member that no instructions have been received from the Secretary of State in reference either to the protest or the petition.

Mr. RYRIE: That does not answer my question. Have any replies or communications been received on the subject at all?

The COLONIAL SECRETARY: The reply I have already made is the only one I am authorised to make.

Mr. RYRIE: Would it not be better to refuse to answer the question at all?

The COLONIAL SECRETARY was understood to reply that he had nothing more to say.

Mr. RYRIE: The date of the petition is the 2nd October, and I have received replies to communications from London of dates considerably later than that. Even allowing some little time for consideration, there has been ample time for a reply to have been received.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY: We don't dictate to the Colonial Secretary when replies should be sent to us.

Mr. RYRIE: As I have already said, I think it would be better to decline altogether answering my questions than to say you have had no instruction to give to the replies. That is not an answer to my questions.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY: Whenever the Government is instructed to make any communication to the hon. member, he may rest assured it will be done.

Mr. RYRIE: I ask if any reply or communication has been received on the subject. If the Government decline to answer that question, then the inference is that a reply or communication has been received.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY: You need not infer that anything has been received.

Mr. RYRIE: I infer nothing.

The COLONIAL SECRETARY: Well, nothing has been received.

Mr. RYRIE: No reply or communication at all?

The COLONIAL SECRETARY: No.

Mr. RYRIE: That is an answer to my questions, and I am perfectly satisfied.

JURY LIST.

The Council then proceeded to revise the Jury List with closed doors.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

23rd February.

BEFORE JAMES RUSSELL, ESQ.

DRUNK AND INCAPABLE.

J. Kelley, a seaman on board the U.S. corvette Kearsage, was charged by P.C. 23 with being drunk and incapable, for which offence he was fined 50 cents.

A STREET QUARREL.

Chinese constable No. 142 charged Lum Awong and Wong Aing, two street coolies, with creating a disturbance in Wellington Street at 4 p.m. on the 22nd instant.

The second prisoner said that the first wanted to claim half what he had earned carrying baggage for a gentleman.

The first prisoner was fined 50 cents, and the second was discharged.

IN SHORE AFTER GUNFIRE.

The owner of a sampan, named Ohak Aying, was charged by P.C. 83 with having her boat in shore at the "Sailors Home" at 10 p.m. on the 22nd, after gunfire.

The prisoner was fined 10 cents.

ASSAULT.

Mingoo, Dolah, Aman, and Dolat, four seamen on board the Siamese ship Queen of England, were summoned by Wan Akoon, a stevedore's coolie, for assaulting him.

The second defendant said the complainant gave abuse and they beat him.

He was fined $2, and the rest 25 cents each.

YOKOHAMA.

On the afternoon of the 13th February, His Excellency Yamagata, Minister of War, General Saigo, Col. Fukuwara, and other Japanese officials, witnessed a review of the battalion of Royal Marine Light Infantry, under Col. Richards, at the Parade Ground, British Camp. The whole available force went through a series of field manœuvres, after which the guests amongst whom were the Capitaine Commandant and officers of the Infanterie de Marine Française were shewn through the huts, the hospital, &c. The signal lights and field telegraphy apparatus were also explained and experimented with.

We have received from the committee, a circular notifying that an Exhibition will be held this year in the Gosho, Kioto, similar to those which have taken place during the last three years. It will open on March 1st, and remain open to the public for 100 days i.e., until June 8th. During that time, foreigners will be permitted to visit Kioto, and to exhibit articles at the Exhibition, and those exhibiting will be allowed to visit the city one week before and one week after the above date. The other rules are the same as those of former years. Specimens of the products of Japan are to be collected from the various districts, and will be classified accordingly. Foreigners are cordially invited to visit, and to exhibit and to assist the Exhibition, and a desire is expressed by the Committee "that all learned persons will advise and give information respecting the articles exhibited."

Our readers will remember the terrible catastrophe of which the Nil was the victim during the night of the 20th of last March, and the proofs of sympathy shown by the population of the coast and the officers of the Japanese Government. The greatest care and attention were shown to the too few survivors of the accident, and the remains of the unfortunate shipwrecked ones were collected and buried with the greatest care. The council of administration of the Messageries Maritimes has decided upon offering a token of its gratitude to Mr. Maida Koria, officer of the Ashigara Ken, who particularly distinguished himself upon the unhappy occasion; and it therefore charged Mr. Conil, its Agent at Yokohama, to offer him, in its name, a gold chronometer and chain, having within an inscription, with the name of the Company, that of the person for whom it is intended, and the date of the shipwreck of the ill-fated Nil. This handsome present has been sent by Mr. Conil to His Excellency Okuma, Minister of Finance, so that it may be forwarded to its destination, and we believe that the honourable minister, who is a good judge in such matters, particularly appreciates the delicate act of which one of his countrymen is the object, and which is the first instance of the kind in Japan. We also learn that the monument, the erection of which was decided on by the company in memory of the unfortunate victims of the Nil, is in construction at Yokoska, and will be forthwith transported to the place where the unfortunate people were buried.—Japan Gazette, February 13th-15th.

HIOGO.

We understand that the port of Tsuruga, on the north-west coast, will shortly be opened to foreign trade and residence.—Hiogo Herald.

A stone, upon which an appropriate inscription is to be cut, has been placed on the site of the temporary observatory upon the Suwayama, from which M. Delacroix observed the recent Transit of Venus. It is intended for the guidance of those astronomers who may visit Kobe for the purpose of observing the Transit of Venus which is to take place eight years hence. Eight years does not seem a long time, yet how few of those of us who witnessed the last Transit are likely to be here to witness the next! Perhaps fifty—perhaps not twenty.

No. 2 of the new issue of the Minato Shimbun is dated January 28th, but was only issued on the 30th. Certain taxes which were to have been collected on minerals under the new mining laws are not to be collected for a time. The notice about the proposed withdrawal of the three sorts of satsu is published. The Home Department notifies that certain alterations having been made in the tariff in use in the Philippine Islands, the particulars are published for general information. The Governor of this Ken notifies the starting of the new line of Japanese mail steamers. They will run from Yokohama to Shanghai, touching here and at Shimonoseki and Nagasaki, and will start from the terminal points every Wednesday. The line will be composed of the boats belonging to the Okurasho, and the first starter will be the Takasago maru, (late New York). The birth of the daughter of one of the Imperial concubines is noted.—Hiogo News.

HAKODATE.

February 4th.

A fire broke out at 5 A.M. this morning, in the rear of the British Consulate. The stables were burnt down, and a bello perished in the flames. The main building of the Consulate were untouched, but they had a narrow escape.

A Japanese steamer lately arrived, having on board a very large quantity of gunpowder, as freight. On the representations of the British Consul, the authorities ordered the vessel to shift anchorage, and she removed outside.—Japan Gazette.

OSAKA.

On Sunday night, a large fire laid a large district of Osaka waste. It broke out in Yamana Yashiro at midnight, and cleared all the buildings before it got as far as Nagabori-bashi, a space of 15 cho long, or about 1 English mile. It was extinguished at 12 o'clock yesterday.—Japan Gazette, Feb. 9th.

It is stated that a high officer named Higashikongô has left Tokio for Osaka, in order to take part in the meeting which is about to be held to consider the Corean business. The disagreement which exists on this subject between the samurai of Choshiu and Satsuma has not yet been allayed, and it appears that any agreement on this subject will be very difficult. It is also said that officers from all the ken will assist at this meeting, which was fixed for the 10th inst.—L'Echo du Japon, Feb. 10th.

The native journals appear much perplexed by the presence at this moment in Osaka of so many officials and ex-officials. Kido, Ito, Itagaki, Inouyé and others are said to be assembled there, and their meeting has not unnaturally given some colour to the rumour that changes in the Cabinet are impending. The Nichi Nichi Shimbun is assured that Inouyé, Furusawa and Komuro are at this moment strenuously endeavouring to procure a meeting of Itagaki with Kido and others, in order that their past differences may be reconciled and amicable relations once more entered upon. But this result, it adds, is uncertain.—Daily Advertiser, Feb. 11th.

A DISGUSTING WAGER.

At a public-house on the Warrington side of Leigh, but not so far distant from the town, there were assembled on a Saturday evening a number of labourers and others, who had met by arrangement to see a wager settled. We have read of the Chinese betting on two fighting grasshoppers, and races between cheese-hoppers, black beetles, and spiders have before now been the subject of heavy betting, but if our readers were to recall all the horrid tales they may have heard of disgusting conduct on the part of semi-brutalised humanity, they could scarcely imagine the nature of the exploit the men had assembled to witness. It consisted in biting off a toad's head, eating an ounce of twist tobacco, and three large raw potatoes. The bet was the price of the tobacco and two gallons of beer, and for this the "man" actually did what he had promised and won the wager. Our local missionary societies had better look him and his friends up, for outside of those countries where cold roast missionary is considered a delicacy we could scarcely imagine there lived a man so thoroughly savage and bestial.—Leigh Chronicle.

THE CENSUS RETURNS IN PRUSSIA.

The official returns of the population of Prussia for 1871 show that kingdom had, three years ago, 24,639,000 inhabitants. Of these, 8,268,000, or almost exactly one-third, were Roman Catholics; the bulk of the remainder being members of the Evangelical State Church. Excluding the Jews, who number 325,000, as well as the Roman Catholics, there are not 50,000 formally recognized Nonconformists in Prussia. In the German Empire of which the total population at the same date was 41,058,000 the proportions are but slightly different. The Evangelicals are 25,580,000, or 62 per cent. of the whole, as against nearly 65 per cent. in Prussia, while the Roman Catholics are 36 per cent. as against 33 per cent. in Prussia. The Dissenters and persons disclaiming any creed were in the Empire a little under 100,000, and the Jews numbered 512,000. The same statistical tables give some interesting information respecting the diffusing of education in Prussia. It appears that out of the twenty-five millions of Prussians a little more than two millions and a half, or 10 per cent., were either "illiterates" or only able to to read and write "imperfectly." By far the highest proportion of these were to be found among the Roman Catholic population. The districts in which the percentage of ignorance was smallest were Wiesbaden, Berlin, Sigmaringen, and Merseburg; while it was largest in Posen, Dantzic, Bromberg, and Marienwerder. In the former districts the proportion of illiterates varies from 1.10 per cent. to 0.03 per cent. among the men, and from 2.11 per cent. to 4.52 per cent. among the women. In the latter districts the percentage among males ranged from 30.31 to 34.63, and among females from 37.66 to 41.04.

THE ALPHONSOS OF SPAIN.

Whether the Alphonsist pronunciamiento eventually proves a good or a bad thing for Spain there is certainly a happy augury in the name. If we except two Fernandos, this is the first time since Charles and his Flemings landed at Villaviciosa in 1517 that a Spanish Sovereign has borne the same name as that of any of the old native kings. In spite of discoveries and conquests in America, of victorious campaigns in Europe, and of triumphs in the arts of peace, it is certain that the decadence of Spain began and has continued under the Austrian and Bourbon dynasties. When Cardinal Cisneros (by Robertson called Ximenes), the last really Spanish Sovereign, was ruling with a firm and steady hand Spain was truly great with all the germs of future constitutional liberty and progress. When the Comuneros were crushed and the head of the patriot Padilla fell on the block at Villalar, all sound hope for Spain disappeared for centuries; and thus was the rule of the foreign dynasties inaugurated. Between the death of Cisneros in 1517 and that of Padilla in 1521 there took place that struggle which ended in the triumph of despotism, and the Spain which had been foremost in establishing and maintaining representative institutions and the rights of the Commons ceased to exist. The name of Alphonso takes us back again to that free and valiant Spain which knew not Hapsburgs and Bourbons and if their way are discarded by this twelfth Alphonso and his advisers, there may yet be a future for Spain more in accordance with the signs of her early history. The name at least is not associated with the three centuries of Spanish decadence.

It may be worth while to recall the memories connected with the twelve Alphonsos. The first takes us back to that valiant Goth who succeeded to the precarious throne of the Asturias in 733 A.D., through his marriage with the daughter of Don Pelayo. This Alphonso was the first Sovereign of Spain who bore the title of Catholic, disused afterwards until the Pope conferred it upon Fernando and Isabella, and their successors. In the days of Alphonso II. (el casto), A.D 791, the body of Santiago was discovered in Galicia, and the French were routed at Roncesvalles. The third Alphonso (A.D. 862-910), surnamed the Great, was celebrated for his successes against the Moors, and advanced the Christian standards to the Tagus. Alphonso IV., the Monk, reigned from 924 to 931, and then retired to the monastery of Sahagun. Alphonso V. was established at Leon, and fell in battle against the Moors in 1028. Alphonso VI. was the king who captured Toledo from the Moors in 1085, and in whose time flourished the Cid Ruy Diaz Campeador. He had an only daughter and heiress, Urraca, whose son was the seventh Alphonso. Alphonso VIII. was the husband of our own Princess Eleanor, daughter of Henry II., and he it was who fought the famous battle of Las Navas de Tolosa. His daughter was Blanche, the mother of St. Louis. His other daughter, Berenguela, married her cousin Alphonso IX. of Castile, and was the mother of St. Ferdinand. We then come to Alphonso X., surnamed the Wise, the author of the "Siete Partidas," the first Spanish code of laws. His sister Eleanor was the wife of our Edward I. Finally, from 1312 to 1350, reigned the king whom the Spaniards have hitherto called Alphonso el ultimo, but who must henceforth be called Alphonso XI.

The young Prince who has now been called to the throne of Spain was born at Madrid, on November 28th, 1857. He is fortieth in direct descent from Don Pelayo, who raised the standard of the Christians in the mountains of Galicia in 716 A.D. The long pedigree is linked together by nine female representatives. First is Ormisinda, the heiress of Don Pelayo, who married Alphonso I. Second is Sancha, the heiress of Leon, who married Fernando I. of Castile. The third is Urraca, the heiress of Castile. The fourth is Constance daughter of Peter the Cruel and wife of John of Gaunt; and the fifth, their daughter Catherine of Lancaster, who married Henry III. of Castile. The sixth is Queen Isabella the Catholic, and the seventh is her unhappy daughter Juana. The eighth is Maria Teresa, the Queen of Louis XIV.; and the ninth is Isabella II. Alphonso XII. is undoubtedly the representative of all this long line, according to the ancient laws of Spain; and he thus combines in his person the modern constitutionalism of Spanish history, such as it is, with the prestige of representing the early Alphonsos, the patriot kings, who were Spanish every inch, and the memory of whose deeds in Court and camp is so dear to all true Castilians.

THE "CHALLENGER" EXPEDITION.

(From a Correspondent on board.)

Leaving Somerset, Cape York, on the 8th of September, the Challenger ran quickly along over the submerged shallow Arafura Sea, which separates Australia from New Guinea, for the Arru Islands, the scene of some of Mr. Wallace's greatest successes in his Bird of Paradise expeditions 15 years ago. He, then proved, by the similarity of the Fauna and Flora, that Australia and New Guinea were at one time joined. Our observations agree with his—that the mountainous land of the original Australian continent has been cut off from it by the shallow Torres Straits, and now forms a separate island of its own, the present New Guinea.

As the land subsided, the mud freighted rivers of New Guinea and the coral-making animals of the sea, while working separately, were steadily running a very even race in their endeavours to prevent the sea from obtaining the entire command. The current running through the Straits from the Pacific Ocean not only brings with it fresh sea water, favourable for coral growth, but its strength is sufficient to turn the course of the muddy fresh-water streams at the mouths of the rivers towards the West, and thus prevent them from interfering with the coral insects; consequently, at the eastern end of the Straits the latter have the entire sea to themselves, the bottom of the shallow channels between the reefs being paved with coral Débris in larger or finer particles. At the western end all trace of coral is lost; there the alluvial deposit of slimy mud has undisputed command, and forms a vast plain between the two islands some 300,000 square miles in extent, stretching north and south for nearly 700 miles without a break, and with no greater depth of water over any part of it than 250 feet. The coral has a depth of only 50 feet.

On approaching the south point of the Arru Islands, we ran suddenly into very shallow water, and were obliged to anchor for the night; the following morning we found ourselves close to some dangerous reefs not drawn on any chart; after clearing these we ran to the northward, and on the 16th of September anchored off the queer trading village of Dobbo, built on a sandspit on one of the outlying islands of the Arru group.

The trading season proper was nearly over, the last prahus having started that morning on their return to Malacca before the setting in of the westerly monsoon. Dobbo is nothing but a large fixed market. The resident population, consisting entirely of traders, is a collection of Chinese and Malay merchants and their slaves and dependants; the natives of the numerous surrounding islands having anything to dispose of live in their boats during their visits.

The houses are like large barns raised on heavy upright logs, with bamboo lath sides and a high pointed roof thatched with palm leaves. The first floor is used as the family residence, the ground floor being either a store or given over to the pigs and poultry, &c. Although strongly built and perfectly secure, one naturally moves as lightly as possible about the rickety-looking structure; sitting down suddenly shakes the whole erection in the most alarming manner.

On the beach some 50 small prahus were being prepared for the pearl and trepang fishery, which is carried on between these islands and the Coast of New Guinea during the next two fine months of October and November. One large prahu of about 150 tons burden, which had been built on the island, was nearly ready for launching. These uncouth and flimsy-looking vessels, with their raised overhanging sterns and a low, drooping bow, look as if they were trying to run down into rather than along the top of the water; it is difficult to imagine any one trusting himself in them at sea except on compulsion. After anchoring we were visited by two men in authority, who carried silver-topped sticks, marked with the Dutch Royal Arms, as their badge of office, and by three Protestant school teachers. Each was clothed in a very old European tail-coat, black trousers, and tall black hat, very much the worse for wear, and were evidently very hot and uncomfortable in such an inappropriate dress for these regions. Our curiosity was much exercised as to the use of certain coloured reed boxes which we saw in each of the boats, but on our visitors leaving we were not kept long in suspense, as they at once commenced to strip off their decayed finery and to dress in the graceful, loose, coloured trousers, light white wrapper, and pointed Chinese hat, so much more becoming and suitable for the climate. The old black hat, like the silver-topped sticks, was evidently a more badge of office. One can scarcely imagine a more difficult article to stow away in a small, closely packed boat, unless it were a lady's bonnet. Before leaving the islands a sufficient supply of black hats was given them to last out their lives. Teachers are maintained at most of the islands in these seas by the Dutch Government. While they are not strictly speaking missionaries, they have great power among the natives, and it is now difficult to find any place where the Christian religion is not represented. The inhabitants of the mainland of Arru are, however, still heathens, but the trade in Birds of Paradise skins, trepang, pearl shells, and edible birds'-nests is so large and well established that with common care, there would be no difficulty or danger to a European visiting any part of the islands; but any one sleeping on shore must be prepared for malarious fever and the numerous nightly pests and annoyances mentioned in Wallace's glowing and excellent account of the islands.

Slavery, lately abolished in all the Dutch possessions, has still a certain amount of vigour at these distant and seldom-visited outposts, the slaves being captured or bought at New Guinea. Until the trade is completely put a stop to, that rich but, in the low grounds, unhealthy country must be considered as closed to any explorer not actually carrying his life in his hands. After having had their countrymen kidnapped and preyed upon for several generations, one cannot wonder at the hostile attitude of the natives.

As the Captain wished to visit a store of coals some three or four miles from our anchorage, a shooting party took the opportunity of visiting the mainland. We started early in the steam pinnace, calling at Dobbo for a pilot. None of the inhabitants having seen a small steamboat before, their excitement was intense; all the Papuan population turned out, accompanied by a number of the less easily-moved Chinese and Malays, and even the hiding propensity of a few of the women gave way to their curiosity. The whole formed a most picturesque group on the beach. In the foreground, the civilized Malays, clad in loose red trousers and a waist-cloth or sheet of calico, of gay and well-chosen colours, thrown negligently over the shoulder, but allowing their graceful and compact figures to be seen in perfection, contrasted well with the dark, savage-looking, and nearly-naked Papuan, with—as Friday is figured in the woodcuts of "Robinson Crusoe"—his frizzly hair bound up close to the head, leaving a bunchy mop to flow with the wind behind him as he, yelling excitedly, scampered along the beach, trying, unsuccessfully, to keep pace with us. Immediately behind, hauled up out of reach of high water, was a line of the quaint, party-coloured prahus, thatched over and used as temporary dwelling-places, partly hiding the rickety but slightly more pretentious fixed habitation; while above all, a grove of tall, slender, clean-trunked cocoanut trees bent their crowning green plume of feathery branches.

On arriving at the mainland we succeeded in shooting three King Birds of Paradise and a few of the great Paradise bird, but the latter were not in good plumage. The following day we obtained a few more specimens, but every one found the work most exhausting. The only escape from the damp, sweltering, hot-house heat of the shady woods, at a temperature of 85 degrees, was into the open, under a burning sun with a temperature between 130 and 140 degrees. The latter was the least trying of the two.

On leaving the Arru Islands we at once found ourselves in deep water again, sounding in 800 fathoms about 10 miles from the land. Sailing to the westward, we next touched at the Ki Islands, the inhabitants of which are noted as the best boat-builders in the Eastern seas, the trade which has doubtless originated in consequence of the valuable suitable timber growing on the islands. Several boats, full of natives, boarded us as we neared the largest island of the group, but they had soon to be ordered out of the ship, owing to the skin disease with which every one of them was troubled. The natives at the regular anchorage at Ki-doulan were much healthier, probably owing to their trade enabling them to command a better diet. The Rajah and a number of the natives visited us, expressing, as at Arru, very great astonishment both at the size of the ship and our evident comfortable and cleanly mode of living, which on our return visit to the shore, and seeing their miserable, dark, and dirty huts, we could readily understand. They are Mahomedans, and very jealous of the women, who must be stowed away very closely, as we never saw a single peeping female eye during our stay.

Crossing the Banda Sea, where we found several islands much out of place on the charts we arrived at Banda, the most southern of the Spice Islands. The largest island of the group is thickly planted with the light-green leaved nutmeg trees, interspersed with the tall, thick-branched, dark-green canarie trees, which were left standing when the original forest land was cleared to protect the valuable but more delicate spice-trees from the strong winds. Besides these large groves of cocoanut trees, plantains and bananas, bamboo clumps, the graceful beetlenut palm, with here and there patches of the original forest, which has not yet been cleared from the precipitous sides of the ravines, make together as rich a foliage picture as one could wish. Near the beach in each small bay are clearances surrounding the dwelling-houses of the planters and their workmen, the really green level lawns—the first we have seen for a very long time—giving quite an Arcadian look to the scene.

An excursion was made to one of the largest nutmeg plantations, the Resident, or Governor, of Banda accompanying the party in our steam pinnace, his canoe, profusely decorated with banners and paddled by a double row of 18 natives, keeping time to the beat of tom toms and gongs, attending him. Their mode of throwing the broad blade of the paddle over their heads, poising it perpendicularly for an instant in exact time between each stroke, coupled with the semi-savage appearance of the crew and their decorated conveyance, the wild boom of the tom tom, the rich ring of the gong, and the accompanying melodious song of the paddlers were most effective and very pleasing to our uninitiated senses. The poor fellows tried so hard to keep pace with the steamboat that it was with great reluctance we ran past them, knowing they would not deign to be towed we did not venture to offer them a rope.

Before embarking for our return to the ship we were welcomed in State at a village by all the inhabitants, who were led by a party of men in red and yellow dresses, armed with decorated swords and spears, and protected with narrow brass arm shields and a flat silver filigree helmet, adorned with Birds of Paradise feathers. They danced to the sound of a drum and small gong, keeping excellent time while imitating the attack and defence of war parties.

Originally all the spice estates were worked by the Dutch Government by means of slave labour; now, both slavery and the monopoly in producing are done away with. Any one is free to start a new plantation, but the primeval jungle, with trailing briars festooned from tree to tree in every direction, and its impenetrable scrub is so dense that one can scarcely understand how any but slave labour could pay for clearing it. The well-established estates are extended yearly, little by little, but with difficulty, on account of the great and continuous labour necessary to keep down the rank tropical weeds and undergrowth on the already cleared lands. The labourers come from Java, the men agreeing for a term of years. Their wives are encouraged to accompany them, but it is difficult to induce the better class to emigrate. Here as everywhere else, within as well as without the Tropics, the labour question is the all important one. The Java coolies are more or less incapable of thinking of and providing for the morrow, or of accumulating wealth as a means of rising in the social scale; their wants are so few, and Nature is here so bountiful of her treasures, that they can readily live for a week on the wages of one or two real days work. Who is to blame them for remaining idle in such an enervating climate for the rest of the time? Keeping order among them is a matter of no small difficulty; the only punishment allowed by law is imprisonment, with to the planter the consequent loss of service. A blow given by an European is also punished by imprisonment, without the alternative of a fine; this effectually prevents ill-treatment, but, on the other hand, where the owner punishes justly it seems a pity not to allow a certain latitude. Banda, besides growing the best nutmegs, is also famed for its incessant earthquakes, but all was quiet during our visit. An active volcano bounds one side of the anchorage, which itself is evidently the broken-down interior of an old crater; several of our party ascended it without difficulty. The sides being at an angle of between 27 and 30 degrees from the horizontal line the descent was a little troublesome, but nothing to speak of.—Times.

A REMARKABLE BEQUEST.

The Liverpool Courier announces that the local charities of that town will receive a very large bequest under the will of Mr. Roger Lyon Jones, who died recently at his residence, Prince's Park. The deceased, who was a self-made Liverpool merchant engaged in the timber trade, accumulated a large fortune, and the bulk of it is bequeathed to the local charities. Mr. Jones was a bachelor, and had few relatives. Among them he has apportioned the ample sum of £40,000. The whole residue of his estate is left in the hands of his executors for distribution among the Liverpool charities, according to their discretion. It is impossible as yet to ascertain the amount of Mr. Jones's estate, but the residue, after providing for the legacies to his relatives, is expected to range between £150,000 and £200,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The disappearance of the Danube between Morhingen and Immindingen, on the frontier of the Duchies of Baden and Wurtemberg, is a curious natural phenomenon. For at least half a century it has been noticed that some portion of the water of the river flowed into cavities in the calcareous rocks—Jura limestone—to reappear again near the town of Aach, in the Hobgau. Now the whole body of water disappears in the vast cavities which have been formed.

Sir Boyle Roche, of "bull" celebrity, once sent an amusingly equivocal invitation to an Irish nobleman of his acquaintance: "I hope, my lord, if ever you come within a mile of my house, that you'll stay there all night." When he was suffering from an attack of gout, he thus rebuked his shoemaker: "Oh, you're a precious blockhead, to do directly the reverse of what I desired you! I told you to make one of the shoes larger than the other, and instead of that you have made one of them smaller than the other!"

The Eureka Sentinel of the 22nd has the following: "A large specimen of coal from Pancake Mountain was brought by G. D. Howell to the Sentinel office to-day. The specimen is of good quality, and we should judge far superior to the Mount Diablo article. It burns freely and leaves a clear, white ash. It is evidently a combination of anthracite and bituminous, and for the manufacture of coke is said to equal the best Pittsburgh cannel coal. At the depth of 400 feet the vein is thirty-four inches in width, well defined and solid, and appearances indicate an extensive and valuable deposit."

A STRANGE BED.—A short time ago the driver of the early train from Havre observed, when he had got about halfway to Harfleur, a man standing upon the front of the engine; the train was stopped, and the man, when got down, could give no account of how he came there. He said he knew nothing of the matter till wakened by the noise of the engine and the whistling, when he stood up. It is supposed that, having had too much to drink, he had lain down and slept on this uncomfortable place, which is not more than 12 inches wide, and it is almost a miracle that he did not fall off when he attempted to get upon his legs.

A valuable plant has lately been brought under the notice of the Paris Académie des Sciences. The Gombo is a plant of the mallow tribe, growing in hot countries—principally in Syria and Egypt—and is cultivated for the sake of its fruit. Its fibres have been made into paper, rivalling the best products of the kind. The stem and outer covering of the fruit produce a species of the gum called gombine, which makes an excellent cough syrup, while oil available for the manufacture of soap and candles, can be extracted from the seed, and resin from the sap of the plant. It has been proposed to cultivate the plant to some extent in Algeria.

A Mormon paper at Salt Lake places the number of polygamists in the Territory at 1,000 men, 3,000 women and 9,000 children, and the cost and loss, by legal punishment of all, at $2,000,000, and thinks that the Courts would have around them 3,000 crying women and 9,000 crying children. This is probably a pretty accurate computation. One of the beauties of the polygamous system is shown by statement that within a stone's throw of a prominent church in Salt Lake is the residence of an avowed Mormon who is the husband of a woman and her two daughters. Thus, his first wife is his mother-in-low, his stepdaughters are his wives, his son by his first wife is half-brother to his other wives, and a sort of uncle to his other children, and—you can study it out further, if you want to.—Alta Californian.

THE ABORIGINES OF FORMOSA.

The Aborigines of Formosa naturally fall under two divisions. The first includes the ancient inhabitants of the great plains on the west side of the island, who seem to have possessed some of the elements of civilization before the invasion of the Chinese, which took place about the middle of the seventeenth century. They had received missionaries and teachers from the Dutch, who entered the island in the year sixteen hundred and twenty four, and many thousands were said to have become Christians; but when the Dutch were driven out by Koksinga they soon fell under the domination of the Chinese, who drove them from their rich lands on the coast, and they are now found scattered nearly the whole length of the island, generally inhabiting the sterile and hilly lands at the foot of the great mountain ranges to the east,—where they are not yet free from Chinese craft and covetousness and are exposed to attack by the wild tribes from the mountains above.

They have frequently migrated to rid themselves from unpleasant neighbours both Chinese and savage, and there are known to be large colonies of them who have penetrated the mountains and settled in rich valleys on the east side of the island.

These civilized aborigines are generally known by the Chinese name of Pepo-whan, literally, barbarians of the plain. A large division of them near the centre of the island, who still speak their aboriginal language, are called Sek-whan, or ripe barbarians.

The second division of the aborigines of Formosa includes those who are still wild and savage and independent of the Chinese. They inhabit the great ranges of mountains in the east part of the island and occupy nearly half of its whole extent. They are divided up into many small tribes and nations, each speaking a different dialect or language, but similar in their custom of tattooing some part of the body, and in cutting off and preserving the heads of their enemies. The charge of cannibalism made against them appears to be unfounded. They live in great part by hunting, but cultivate the steep mountain sides in millet, and sweet potatoes, and in a kind of rice that needs no irrigation. They are generally known by the appellation of Chu-whan, literally, unripe barbarians.

The Pepo-whans of the south part of the island occupy a large track of hilly country to the east of Ta-koo and Tai-wan-fu, comprising the villages of Bunkimseng, Alukang, Backea, Kongana, Kuwana, Senkuli &c. They probably number five thousand people, and a large colony of them is known to exist on the east coast, of several thousand inhabitants.

They no longer speak their aboriginal language, using Chinese instead. I procured the list of words from a very old woman at Kongana, who said that this language was little used even in the time of her parents, Chinese having already become general. There can be no great dependence put upon the list of words, as the woman was old and toothless, and found it difficult to pronounce the words she could remember.

I found among these Pepo-whan a master of old manuscripts in Roman letters, apparently deeds and contracts. They still keep these with much care though no one can read them, the knowledge of both the language and the letters in which they are written having been lost. These manuscripts seem to be indubitable proofs and remains of the Dutch occupation. When the Dutch were driven out, the missionaries and teachers were murdered and the whole effect of their work was supposed to have been obliterated; but these manuscripts seem to show that for at least a hundred and fifty years afterwards, the Pepo-whans kept enough of the knowledge gained of the Dutch, to write their own language in these foreign characters, and with this they must have almost necessarily kept books, and retained some knowledge of the Christian religion. These manuscripts are in the ancient Pepo-whan language, spelled out in Roman letters, the dates generally being in Chinese spelled out in the same way. Of the manuscripts procured, sixteen are dated in the reign of Kean Loong who reigned from seventeen hundred and thirty-six to seventeen hundred and ninety-six, four in the reign of Yung Ching who reigned from seventeen hundred and twenty-three to seventeen hundred and thirty-six, and one of the reign of Ka King who began to reign in seventeen hundred and ninety-six. Curiously enough the earliest of the documents are dated eighty years after the Dutch had left the island. It is quite possible that documents may yet be found among this people, giving some account of the history of their sufferings, after the Dutch, their protectors, were driven away. The language of the Pepo-whans as shown by the list seems to have been quite similar to those still spoken by the savages of the island, and appears to be connected with the aboriginal languages of the Phillipines, as if Formosa had been peopled from that direction.

The Pepo-whans are a large and well-formed race and show little of Chinese features except when it can easily be traced to intermarriage. The men have no dress to distinguish them from the Chinese, unless the turban might be considered such, though the Chinese use one also to some extent. The women have a peculiar and very becoming dress, consisting of wide trowsers and a short and wide-sleeved jacket, meeting the trowsers at the waist and secured with a sash. The head is wrapped in a turban, the ends of which are drawn out at the sides of the head like wings, giving the wearers a peculiarly jaunty and coquettish appearance.

They are very poor, having mortgaged the lands they now hold to the Chinese, to whom they have to pay their rice crops as interest or rent, leaving the crops of sweet potatoes for their own use. They were visited some three years ago by Dr. Maxwell, a Scotch missionary, and received Christianity readily, as many as fifty and sixty being baptized in a day. The Chinese system of worship seems to have had but little root among them, and the traditions they still have of the Dutch no doubt influenced them to some extent. There are now several hundreds of Christians among them, with several chapels and schools established.

There is a flourishing mission established among them at Bankimseng by Spanish Dominicans. The Pepo-whans of Bankimseng differ somewhat in costume from their brethren of the north, and there appears to be ground for supposing that there has been a coalescing of two or more tribes. There seems to be little hope of the Pepo-whans regaining a foothold on the west side of the island among the more crafty Chinese, and there will be no alternative but for them to follow those who have gone before into the unknown wilds on the east side of the island.—China Review.

A MAHOMMEDAN VIEW OF ENGLISH RELIGIOUS DISPUTES.

The following is translated from an article in the Constantinople al-Fawáid of the 23rd of December:—

The most noteworthy and strange feature among the English people at the present time is their strife and contention about the ritual and ceremonial which should be observed in their Church during public worship. Some maintain the importance of their bishops and priests being arrayed in gorgeous apparel while officiating at the service, the use of incense, prostrations, genuflexions, and the like, similar to the present usages in the orthodox Roman Catholic Church, notwithstanding that they have been content to dispense with these adjuncts for the last 300 years. For our own part, we are at a loss to conceive what has led them at this time of day to revert to such matters, and it seems to us that they would be much better employed in endeavouring to conciliate the different Protestant sects, of their own flesh and blood, who are estranged from the Established Church, than in fighting about externals. But what is most wonderful to contemplate is the phenomenon of politicians of high rank taking part in these religious discussions. Mr. Gladstone, for instance, an ex-Prime Minister, has written a pamphlet against the proceedings of the Church of Rome, denying its supremacy, impugning the infallibility of the Pope, and so forth—a task much more appropriate to the Archbishop of Canterbury. It seems, however, that the ex-Premier has beaten himself to this style of composition, either as a stepping-stone towards his return to the premiership or in order to vent his anger on those Catholics who differed from him politically. It would have been far better, in our humble opinion, if during his tenure of office he had paid some attention to the abrogation of the Treaty of Paris, with respect to the Black Sea, and to the predominance of Germany over France, and cognate matters becoming a Chief Minister of State. These, however, he studiously neglected, and plunged into Church matters. Here one may step in and say that the doctrine of Papal infallibility enters fairly into the province of politics, inasmuch as it is open to question whether a Catholic who holds that tenet can at the same time be loyal to the State? We reply, This doctrine of the infallibility was proclaimed three years ago, when Mr. Gladstone was Prime Minister; why, then, did he not notice it at the time? If it be said, on the other hand, that the premiership so intoxicated him that he overlooked the abrogation of the treaty referred to, and also the infallibility question, and that he did not become alive to the importance of those subjects until he was superseded, when he had leisure and could calmly reflect upon the serious events which transpired during his tenure of office, then all we have to say is, that we trust his next pamphlet will discuss the abrogation of the Paris treaty.

After some remarks on the sympathy manifested in England for Prince Bismarck's policy towards the Ultramontanes, the writer proceeds:—

But the English would be far better employed in attending to their interests in India in connection with the progress of Russian supremacy in Central Asia; and their best way of doing so would be would be to aid the Muslims in that region by supplying them with arms, with officers to instruct their troops in the system of modern European warfare, and in endeavouring to excite them to repel any foreign invader of their country; for if Bokhara and Afghanistan, Khiva and Persia, were properly supported, it would be impossible for Russia to establish her authority over those territories. . . . Should it be said that the English are not likely to be unanimous on such a point as this, seeing that they are at sixes and sevens among themselves, and squabbling about such matters as the dress of the clergy, the position of the officiating priest with his back to the congregation, and the burning of incense, we reply that these, after all, are trivial matters, the offspring of unlimited liberty, and that despite the momentary excitement which they have occasioned the English as a people, are not likely to swerve from their national bent of caring primarily for the safety and stability of their empire. Should it be urged, on the contrary, that England's backwardness to watch over the interests of her Empire in the far East is owing to her selfishness and insouciance, we venture to reply that the fault rests as much with the Governments named who, although agreeing in the doctrine of unity, are not only divided in opinion but opposed to one another, and not unfrequently inimical to their own rulers. Look, for example, at the Turkoman tribes, now recognizing the authority of Khiva, and next giving their allegiance to Persia. Look, again, at the bitterness and heartburning existing between Persia and Afghanistan about Herat, and then to the hatred between the Amir of the latter country and his son Yaa'kub-Khan; whereas it is to the individual and general interest of all these States to be joined together as one man against Russia.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BRITISH ROYAL FAMILY AND RELIGION.

One of the interesting phases of the struggle going on in the English Church between the High, Low, and Broad parties, is the position occupied by the Royal Family in regard to the questions at issue. At present the Broad Church party has the advantage of holding the sympathy of the Queen, who is the head of the establishment. Victoria leans very strongly, as her husband leaned, toward the utmost broadness. Her favorite divines have been such men as Stanley and Kingsley, while the late Dr. Norman McLeod, a minister of the Scotch Church, was an especial favorite. She is a source of much anxiety to the Ritualists, and seems to have systematically arrayed herself in antagonism to them by her conspicuous disregard for holy days and seasons, and especially for Lent. These facts give the Broad Church party a strong position against the High Churchmen. Positions may be changed, however, in the event of the Queen's death. What the attitude of the Prince of Wales is does not appear to be known, nor is it evident that he takes any unusual interest at all in the questions involved. In the latter case his accession to the throne will certainly cause a turning of the tables ecclesiastical, for the wife is a devoted Ritualist and would undoubtedly work with a will, as Queens seem generally to work, for the religious interest to which she is so heartily united. Still, it is possible that the Prince has decided opinions of his own, unexpressed at present, but so decided that when the time comes for their expression there will be a marked effect. Judging by the attitude of the family generally on religious questions, it is reasonably safe to infer that the Broad party will lose no vantage ground by a change of rulers. The family is German, and it seems to lean towards German thought. Princess Alice, of Hesse, was a patron of the late Dr. Strauss, whose lectures on Voltaire were written at her request, and delivered at her tea parties at Darmstadt. The Crown Princess of Germany is also understood to be an adherent of the free-thinking school of theology. If the women of the family are thus bold and broad in their religious opinions, the men are probably just as much so, and the Prince of Wales is not so subject to his wife as to allow her to influence him greatly one way or the other, unless he regards religion as a matter to be relegated entirely to the feminine mind. In that case, as already stated, will there be an opportunity for the Ritualists when the prince comes to the throne. While no public expression has been made of such a hope, it is more than probable that the High Church party has a great hope centred in the future Queen. There is probably just enough of Jesuitry in that party to have begun already, through Alexandra, such operations upon the mind of the future King as will either array him on that side, or lead him to such thought of the matter as will place him even more decidedly than his mother stands on the broadest platform possible. One thing is certain, namely, that in the coming ecclesiastical revolution in England the Prince of Wales will play a highly important part.—Boston Journal.

ENGLISH AND CHINESE DICTIONARY, WITH THE
PUNTI AND MANDARIN PRONUNCIATION.

An ANGLO-CHINESE DICTIONARY, published at the Daily Press Office, Hongkong.

FOR comprehensiveness and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extenso. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given, the accents being carefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The typography displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size of body, thereby effecting a vast economy of space, achieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have heretofore characterized Chinese publications.

To illustrate the vast scope of the work, the following facts are submitted for consideration. Obalmers' Vocabulary contains about 16,000 Chinese characters, and Medhurst's English and Chinese Dictionary about 100,000, whilst this work contains more than 50,000 English words, and upwards of 600,000 Chinese characters. Again, despite all the grammars and other elementary works as yet published, the student of this difficult language absolutely requires examples to display the various applications and equivalents of different words which have one general meaning. Of these examples this work contains more than five times as many as any other Dictionary hitherto published.

For practical purposes the arrangement of the work is so complete, that a reference to its pages enables a person who understands English to communicate effectively with natives who understand nothing but Chinese. In this respect the work will be found indispensable to all Europeans residing in China, and to the natives themselves it explains subjects fully with which very few indeed of them are perfectly acquainted. To parties resident in England and interested in China it cannot but be invaluable occasionally.

It comprises upwards of two thousand large quarto pages.

BILLIARD TABLES.

C. LAZARUS & Co.'s Billiard Tables are now the only ones appreciated in India, as a long and steady experience extending over 50 years has proved them to be the best and most suitable for the climate.

C. L. & Co. have received a large number of very flattering testimonials from all parts of India, China, Burmah, Ceylon, Manila, Java, Straits, and Persia, testifying to the superior make and quality of their Billiard Tables, and while thanking their Friends and Patrons in China for the liberal support so long extended to their firm, would, in soliciting further patronage, beg to mention the following facts which have conduced to the success their efforts have hitherto met with.

Every table is made of solid wood, well seasoned and not veneered.

The Cushions are constructed on an entirely new principle, introduced by C. L. and Co., and unlike that adopted by English makers, and are much more durable and lively than English-made cushions.

No table leaves C. L. and Co.'s premises until it has been standing ready finished for over 12 months, in order to ensure perfectly seasoned material.

Every article of furniture, also, that leaves C. LAZARUS and Co.'s Establishment, is guaranteed of Solid and Seasoned Wood.

C. L. & Co. have always ready a large stock of new Cushions on their peculiar principle, and which can be supplied for any table, the accurate length and breadth of the slate bed only being required.

C. L. and Co. have always in hand a large stock of Billiard, Pool and Pyramid Balls, Cues, Tips, Chalks, Cloth, and every requisite for the Billiard Table.

Old Cushions renewed on C. LAZARUS & Co.'s peculiar principle, thereby making an old table as good as new.

BILLIARD LAMPS.

Six and Eight Light Lamps for Oil, or Kerosine, the latter with burners on the duplex principle, giving a light equal to twelve ordinary lamps.

Eighteen light ring burner Gas Pendants, with rod to suspend over table.

C. LAZARUS AND Co. have been appointed Sole Agents in India and the East for THE NEW PATENT ELECTRIC BILLIARD MARKER, by means of which the score can be marked from the cushion of the table.

WINTER-GREEN.

To-day the winter woods are wet,
And chill with airs that miss the sun;
The autumn of the year is done,
Its leaves all fallen, its flower-stars set,
Its frosty hours begun.

Should last year's gold narcissus yearn
For next year's roses, oh! how vain!
No brief dead flowers arise again,
But each sweet little life in turn
Must shoot and bloom and wane.

Sweet, had the years that slip so fast
Brought you too soon, or me too late,
How had we gnashed our teeth at fate,
And wandered down to death at last,
Forlorn, disconsolate!

Surely before the stars were sure,
Before the moon was set in heaven,
Your unborn soul to mine was given,
Your clear white spirit, rare and pure,
For me was formed and shriven.

Ah! surely no time ever was
When we were not; and our souls' light
Made those cold spaces infinite
That lie between the years like glass,
Seen only in God's sight!

Howe'er it be, my one desire,
If chance has brought us face to face,
Or if the scheme of things found place
To store our twin hearts' light and fire
In strange foreseeing grace,—

Howe'er it be, for us at least,
The woodland-pathways are not dark,
New lights are on the boughs and bark,
And in the sunless rainshot east,
We hear a mounting lark!

GROWTH OF THE ENGLISH RACE IN AMERICA.

When the first Englishmen settled in these wild lands, the natives regarded them as gods. Their powers were so far superior to anything which had been hitherto experienced, that the ordinary nature of human beings seemed inadequate to account for them. They had weapons which breathed fire and smoke; they could smite their enemies with sudden death at an immense distance, and in some unknown way; they came and went in vessels of enormous size; they had coverings to their bodies of such hardiness that a dart or an arrow glanced off them; in all respects they were wonderful and mysterious. What followed was perhaps the inevitable consequence of the conditions thus established. The inferior race, after a few spasmodic struggles for the mastery, gave way before the superior. The red man, sullenly refusing to be civilised, exasperated by the cruelty and injustice of which he was frequently made the victim, or incapable by his very nature of receiving the impress of European ideas, retired from the shores of the Atlantic, and sought refuge in the wide regions of the west. The history of the United States, reduced to broad and general terms, is the history of an energetic nation of white men gradually spreading farther and farther into the desert, and pursuing the retreating footsteps of several nations of red men, who, after falling back from forest to forest, and from waste, now flutter like a waning phantom between the Rocky Mountains and the western sea.—From Part I. of Cassell's "History of the United States."

CORRUPTION OF THE MONASTIC ORDERS.

In point of fact, these monasteries did, we know, become eventually more corrupt than the world which their inmates had forsaken. By the year 1100 one of their advocates says he gives them up. The pictures which some Popish writers have given us of them in the thirteenth century—Clemangis, for instance —we dare not transfer to our pages. The repute of their piety multiplied the number of their patrons, and welled the stream of their benefactions. With riches came their too frequent concomitants, luxury and pride. Their vow of poverty was no barrier; for though, as individuals, they could possess no property, they might as a body corporate own any amount of wealth. Lands, houses, hunting-grounds and forests; the tithing of tools, of orchards, of fisheries, of kine, and wool, and cloth, formed the dowry of the monastery. The vast and miscellaneous inventory of goods which formed the common property of the fraternity, included everything that was good for food and pleasant to the eye; curious furniture for their apartments, dainty apparel for their persons; the choice treasures of the field, of the tree, and the river, for their tables; soft-paced mules by day, and luxurious couches at night. Their head, the abbott, equalled princes in wealth, and surpassed them in pride. Such, from the humble beginning of the cell, with its bed of stone and its diet of herbs, had come to be the condition of the monastic orders long before the days of Wycliffe. From being the ornament of Christianity, they were now its opprobrium; and from being the buttress of the Church of Rome, they had now become its scandal.—Cassell's History of Protestantism.

OLIVER CROMWELL.

The following letter is addressed to The Times by a correspondent under the nom de plume of "Senex:"—Several imperfect statements having lately appeared on the above subject, let me explain what became of the remains of Cromwell. Partly from printed records, and partly from what I heard from Mr. Wilkinson, to whom some of the Press have alluded, Oliver Cromwell died at Whitehall Palace on the 3rd of September, 1558, after a protracted illness. He had been long suffering from ague, and his case is cited in medical books as one of a man who died of ague while our warehouses were groaning with Peruvian bark, which we did not know how to use. During this illness he became so depressed and debilitated that he would allow no barber to come near him; and his beard, instead of being cut in a certain fashion, grew all over his face. After his death the body lay in State at Somerset-house, having been carefully embalmed, and was afterwards buried with more than regal honours in Henry VII.'s Chapel in Westminster Abbey, where it lay until, after the Restoration, it was taken out of his grave, as were also the bodies of Ireton (Cromwell's son-in-law) and Bradshaw; the latter, as President of the High Court of Justice, having pronounced sentence of death on Charles I. The three bodies were taken in carts to the Red Lion, in Holborn, and on the 30th of January, the anniversary of King Charles's death, they were removed in sledges to Tyburn, where they were hanged until sunset, and then taken down and beheaded; their bodies buried in a deep pit under the gallows, and their heads stuck upon the top of Westminster-hall, where at that time sentinels walked. Ireton's head was in the middle, and Cromwell's and Bradshaw's on either side. Cromwell's head, being embalmed, remained exposed to the atmosphere for 25 years, and then one stormy night it was blown down, and picked up by the sentry, who, hiding it under his cloak, took it home and secreted it in the chimney corner, and, as inquiries were constantly being made about it by the Government, it was only on his death-bed that he revealed where he had hidden it. His family sold the head to one of the Cambridgeshire Russells, and, in the same box in which it still is, it descended to a certain Samuel Russell, who being a needy and careless man, exhibited it in a place near Clare-market. There it was seen by James Cox, who then owned a famous museum. He tried in vain to buy the head from Russell; for, poor as he was, nothing would at first tempt him to part with the relic, but after a time Cox assisted him with money, and eventually, to clear himself from debt, he made the head over to Cox. When Cox at last parted with his museum he sold the head of Cromwell for £230 to three men, who bought it about the time of the French Revolution to exhibit in Mead-court, Bond-street, at half-a-crown ahead. Curiously enough, it happened that each of these three gentlemen died a sudden death, and the head came into the possession of three nieces of the last man who died. These young ladies, nervous at keeping it in the house, asked Mr. Wilkinson, their medical man, to take care of it for them, and they subsequently sold it to him. For the next 15 or 20 years Mr. Wilkinson was in the habit of showing it to all the distinguished men of that day, and the head, much treasured, yet remains in his family.

The circumstantantial evidence is very curious. It is the only head in history which is known to have been embalmed and afterwards beheaded. On the back of the neck, above the vertebræ, is the mark of the cut of an axe where the executioner, having, perhaps, no proper block, had struck too high, and, laying the head in its soft, embalmed state on the block, flattened the nose on one side, making it adhere to the face. The hair grows promiscuously about the face, and the beard, stained, to exactly the same colour by the embalming liquor, is tucked up under the chin, with the oaken staff of the spear with which the head was stuck up on Westminster Hall, which staff is perforated by a worm that never attacks oak until it has been for many years exposed to the weather.

The iron spearhead, where it protrudes above the skull, is rusted away by the action of the atmosphere. The jagged way in which the top of the skull is removed throws us back to a time when surgery was in its infancy, while the embalming is so beautifully done that the cellular process of the gums and the membrane of the tongue are still to be seen. Several teeth are yet in the mouth; the membrane of the eyelid remains, the pia-mater and the dura-mater, thin membranes, which I believe lie over the brain, may be seen clinging to the inner and upper part of the skull. The brain was, of course, removed, but the compartments are very distinct. When the great sculptor, Flaxman, went to see it, he said at once, "You will not mind my expressing any disappointment I may feel on seeing the head?" "Oh, no!" said Mr. Wilkinson, but will you tell me what are characteristics by which the head might be recognized?" "Well," replied Flaxman, "I know a great deal about the configuration of the head of Oliver Cromwell. He had a low, broad forehead, large orbits to the eyes, a high septum to the nose, and high cheek-bones; but there is one feature which will be with me a crucial test, and that is, that, instead of having the lower jaw-bone somewhat curved, it was particularly short and straight, but set out at an angle, which gave him a jowlish appearance." The head exactly answered to the description, and Flaxman went away expressing himself as convinced and delighted.

The head has also a length from the forehead to the back of the head which is quite extraordinary, and one day, before Mr. Wilkinson retired from practice, his assistant called him into the surgery to point out to him how exactly the shaven head of a lad who was there as a patient resembled the embalmed head of Cromwell upstairs, and more particularly in the extreme length between the forehead and the occiput.

Mr. Wilkinson mentioned the circumstance to the gentleman who brought the lad to him. "No wonder," said the gentleman, "for this lad is a direct descendant of Oliver Cromwell, whose name, like this boy's, was Williams before they changed it to Cromwell." It was curious that this type should re-appear or remain after so many years.

When the head was in the possession of Samuel Russell he was frequently intoxicated when he showed it to his friends, and they cut off pieces of the hair, until the head was closely cropped.

A correspondent in the Globe of the 23rd of September or thereabouts believed that the body of Cromwell, after removal from the Abbey, was buried in Red Lion-square, and another body substituted and sent on to Tyburn with Ireton and Bradshaw. But it is not probable they could have obtained an embalmed body for the purpose.

The embalmed head is now in the possession of Mr. Horace Wilkinson, Sevenoaks, Kent.

There is a small hole where the wart was on his forehead, and the eyebrows met in the middle. The head has the appearance of hard, dry leather. There are other details, and there is other circumstantial evidence, and there are records printed and published at the time, but I feel I must not trespass on your valuable space any further, although it is a subject in which many of your readers may take a great interest.

PANTOMIMIC CHILDREN.

The London School Board is said to object that pantomimic children, being bound to attend rehearsal every day for several weeks preceding Christmas, are unable to attend school with the regularity insisted upon by that new Educational Act upon which so many millions sterling will probably be spent, and which probably twenty years hence will leave the common people as ignorant, to any useful intends or purposes, as it has found them now. To these objections it may be briefly replied that the ballet-master has no cane, and that pantomimic children are invariably treated with the greatest kindness and forbearance; next, that the little things themselves like the work, which is literally as good as a play, and a great deal better to them, since they are paid for playing; furthermore, that they can be sent to school, if need be, before or after rehearsal; and finally, that they are often accompanied to the theatre by their mothers, who may be, and often are, employed in some capacity about the house, and that, taking the worst view of the matter, they are in better company in their dressing-rooms, or upon the stage, than they would be sprawling on the door-step, or in the kennel up their native court, or locked up in the garret while mother is gone to the fried fish shop, and incurring the ordinary juvenile risks of tumbling out of a window or setting fire to their pinafores.—George Augustus Sala, "Belgravia."

LADY FOX-HUNTERS.

Gerty and May were in small stiff pointed hats, how fastened on, so tight as they certainly were, the chronicler knows not. They had short, black cock's feathers, fresh faces, dark pupils versus blue, with the gallantest figures in the tightest of habits—one with her purple hair in a twisted cable; the other with a round nugget of gold on the back of her neck; "and all that's best of dark and bright met in their aspect and their eyes." Could the Romance nations or the Renaissance period ever have turned out anything to beat them? The question was thoroughly gone into in a tobacco-parliament that night, with Wharfedale's and Devereux's assistance; and Charles very skilfully closed a discussion which certainly never would have ended otherwise, except with the summons to morning chapel. He said he could not imagine more beautiful people, in an abstract, general way, than English girls, or indeed men; but there was no model but the Italian model, and others could not be got into pictures. The same cast of Italian face and form, Lombard or Etruscan, prevailed, as he said, all through the great pictures of the world; and they were too many and too great for modern men and their subjects. While Titian and Tintoret remain, you must go after them. Rip stood out for Holbein's Englishmen, and thought that Phœbus, Sternchase, and Tingrind, working together, were strong enough to make the insular features "rather typical or so"; and Charles admitted that mysterious expression as the party broke up.—Our Sketching Club.

CONCERNING SHOES.

"How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter!" sang Solomon, describing the beauties of the Church three thousand years ago.

The rough sandals spoken of so contemptuously in Abram's day had given place to sandaliums, consisting of a sole, a strap passing from the heel of the sole to fasten on the instep, and a toe-piece. Gleaming was the gold-embroidered strap of velvet with sapphires, rubies, amethyst, and beryl, and fair were the white feet of the Hebrew ladies then, innocent of the yellow hose now in favour with the Orientals. Stately, too, was their step; for the wide, loose soles and the absence of heels enabled the wearers to move majestically.

We know not where these boots were procured, but on the walls of Thebes are curious Egyptian figures of men with their knees drawn to their chins, playing an instrument like an awl, drawing long threads, which might have been waxed-ends, through soles, and similar devices, while history relates that sandal-making formed a separate trade in Egypt in the fifteenth century B.C.

There is an odd custom of Bible times referred to in the Book of Ruth which then answered for a testimony in Israel—a legal binding of a bargain when property is redeemed or passed from one party to another —"Aman plucked off his shoe and gave it to his neighbour."

Perhaps the form common among the early Saxons in the transfer of authority was a corruption of this. During the festivity following a wedding the bride's father presented his son-in-law with his daughter's slipper, with which the bridegroom thrice rapped the head of his bride to show her that she was no longer under parental rule, but must thenceforth obey her chosen lord.

In the days of the Cæsars the "gentle craft" won a patron saint. St. Crispin, a native of Rome and a convert to Christianity, befriended shoemakers and supplied the oppressed poor with shoes made from leather which angel hands brought him from heavenly tanneries. So says one version of the legend; but another—alas for the Crispin!—says he stole his materials. Be this as it may, he suffered martyrdom for his fate.

Among the early Romans different classes donned different styles of foot-gear. Chief magistrates were conspicuous in red shoes on high days of ceremony. Ladies, too, were red and coxcombs purple shoes of costly textures. With the poor plain black and cheap leathers were the rule. Neat's leather was much in use, if we may judge from the first scene of "Julius Cæsar," where the cobbler says his business is one he may use with a safe conscience: "He is a surgeon to old shoes; as proper men as ever trod upon neat's leather have gone upon his handiwork."

While the Chinese enjoyed their pinching boots, the Dutch their pattens, and North American Indians, moccasin shod, stealthily trod over the mountains and prairies unknown to Christendom, England and France vied with one another in inventing new styles of shoes. The earlier Anglo-Saxon wore sandals; but with Norman conquest "cracorres" (shoes with immense toe-points) were introduced. A certain Earl of Anjou is said to have exercised the privilege which many persons of rank exercise, and to have originated the fashion to hide some deformity of his toes.

In Chaucer's time the turned-up toes were cut in imitation of windows, and fastened with gold chains to the knee. In these strode the Englishmen, while Frenchmen pirouetted in "bird shoes." In these the toe projected like a beak, while the heel was elongated into a claw. Such ridiculous articles of wear excited the wrath of popes and kings; yet in vain were bulls and edicts issued, or councils called, which decreed against them—they continued in vogue for three centuries.

When Henry VIII. ascended the throne the fashion changed. His gouty toes required a more generous width of sole than the steepled points allowed, and soon the court and nobility submissively shuffled about in huge, platter-shaped shoes of velvet and silk.

After Charles II. passed from view the mania for fashioning new styles subsided, and we soon find in England the shoe of our day, which, excepting the high heel, is very sensible. B. W.

GRATITUDE.—On Boxing-day a little boy named William Matthews, aged 11, the son of a working shipwright, called at the Seamen's Hospital, Greenwich, and asked to see the secretary. On being shown into the office he bashfully explained that he had been a patient at the hospital for six weeks in the summer, and in order to show his gratitude for the kind treatment he received during this period, he had saved up all his halfpence and now begged to present them to the Seamen's Hospital as a Christmas gift. He then handed 6s. to Mr. Burdett, the secretary, and expressed regret that it was all he had been able to save.
